Dr. Holliday-Rhodes appointed coroner

Doctor Antony Holliday-Rhodes of Minden has been appointed coroner for the Haliburton County area.

The appointment was made last month and the doctor is expected to take over the duties of the office in early November after completing an orientation course in Toronto.

Dr. L. B. Pierce of Haliburton is presently serving as the coroner for the area.

The coroner is responsible for investigating deaths which occur in provincially funded institutions, such as Hyland Crest, in unusual circumstances, such as those which might be investigated by the police, and other unexplained deaths.

The appointment, which was announced in a letter to Dr. Holliday-Rhodes from Ontario Solicitor General Roy McMurtry, was made by the Ontario Cabinet through an Order in Council.

Barrel does not contain dangerous PCBs

While a barrel found in a Lutterworth Township dump did have 'PCB' marked on the side, according to a Ministry of Environment official, the contents are not the dangerous chemical associated with the initials.

Terry Healy of the MOE conducted the investigation last week following a report that a barrel marked 'PCB' was seen at the Davis Lake dumpsite in the township. Healy said he had an opportunity to examine the barrel, which he said was very old.

"The markings on the barrel indicated it had originated with BP Canada," Healy commented. "The contents were Isoflex PCB". The MOE investigator described the product as a mixture of plastics and fatty acids. The chemical name for the contents is dipenta, erythritol sterified with caprylic acid and butyric acid.

When the barrel was first found concern was expressed because of the initials 'PCB' on the side. The initials today stand for polychlorinated biphenyl, a poisonous pollutant. Healy pointed out that these three letters were used to identify the less toxic substance believed to be in the barrel. The barrel contained only a small amount of the fluid.

"We were unable to get the barrel open because of the rusted condition of the access holes," Healy commented, "but we were able to establish what the contents were by calling the manufacturer." The MOE representative noted that the PCB notation has now been dropped for the material in the barrel since it is more commonly used to identify the dangerous pollutant.

The MOE will dispose of the barrel.

Getting into the swing of things, this youngster captures the spirit of the bluegrass concert Sunday afternoon at the Stanhope Airport. The free musical afternoon was sponsored by the Metropolitan Carnarvon Board of Trade and Wine Tasting Society and featured the musical duo Cedar Creek. MOE agrees to test liming program but not prepared to save all lakes

The Haliburton County Anti-pollution Committee may have won a battle in its efforts to have the Ontario Ministry of the Environment begin a test liming program, but the entire war against acid rain may soon be lost.

That was the assessment of Dr. Michael Collins, a spokesman for the committee, following a meeting last week with MOE officials. According to Collins, the ministry has stated it is prepared to proceed with the test liming of several lakes during the winter of 1983 but that due to a lack of funds no overall scheme for protecting or saving Ontario lakes will be started.

Collins described the action as a political move. "The minister, Dr. Harry Parrott, appears to feel that there just isn't enough votes to be won by attacking the problem on a province-wide scale and so he is willing to write-off a large majority of our lakes," Collins said he was astounded by the revelation.

The pollution group spokesman met with Dr. Tom Brydges of the ministry to discuss the progress the government agency was making in its battle against acid rain.

According to Collins the government is willing to consider the implementation of a limited program of liming where commercial interests such as lodges or fishing are threatened by acid rain. "On other lakes, if 100% of the cottagers or property owners are in favour of liming programs, the ministry will react, but if even a few object the MOE will not go ahead with the program."

Collins stated that the government program represents barely one-tenth of the total he felt would be necessary to protect and save a large number of Ontario lakes. "They plan on spending $5 million, which could be used to save about 2000 lakes," Collins estimates province-wide program would cost $50 million and involve 200,000 lakes. "We admit there will be lakes that simply can't be saved because it is too difficult to get to them or for other reasons, but we certainly have to make an effort to reclaim those which we do have access to," Collins stated.

The scientist commented that 140 lakes in the Sudbury area have been allowed to die because no pressure was brought to bear on the provincial government. "Nobody screamed loud enough so the Ontario government just let the lakes die," Collins said.

"The minister doesn't appear to realize the impact the stand is going to have on the total environment," Collins commented. "It is more than just a dead lake. Soon the animals, ducks, birds and other creatures around the lake will be affected. Allowing the lakes to die will start the breakdown of the ecosystem. I am horrified by the prospects this decision holds for Ontario."

Collins was particularly upset by the fact the Ontario government has granted certain industries in the province large sums of money to sustain and expand their operations and yet there is little money available to combat acid rain.

"The politicians just don't feel there are enough votes to be gained by saving the lakes," Collins said. "All we can do is continue to yell and scream and hope the message gets through that the public is not willing to allow the lakes to die."

The spokesman suggested

FROM THE CHAMBER

By Bob Stinson

Another Summer Season goes into the record books and it is time again to look back and see how we did. The consensus seems to be that business on the whole was down just slightly from the previous year. It started out a little soft but ended with a fairly solid August. Many resorts were concerned that their advance bookings were down considerably at the beginning, but as the season developed most vacancies were filled by visitors making last minute plans.

With all signs pointing to a couple of rough years in the general economy, Tourism is still expected to hold up comparatively well. The pressures of the cities are now such that it is becoming more important than ever for people there to get away from it all. As long as we provide the type of environment they need and do a good job of promoting what we have, this major portion of our economy will continue to grow.

The Ministry of Industry & Tourism is this year spending more than ever before to sell Ontario to its own residents. The Chamber is presently soliciting advertising for a bigger promotional package than they have ever embarked on in the past. "We heard there was going to be a recession - but we have decided not to participate."

Frost Centre sets plan

Five years ago a member of representative groups attended a "Participation Day" at the Frost Centre and after touring most of the facilities a number of workshops were set up to explore what participants thought the future development of the centre should be. Since that time planning has been taking place, with consideration given to those discussions along with the mandate given to the centre when it was created.

Last Friday the original participants were invited back to the centre for the unveiling of the resulting plan and once again were asked for their input towards its implementation. The key word in the title of the document was "Integrated". Much effort was put into providing a plan that would allow such activities as recreation, research, demonstrations, logging, and environmental protection taking place side by side and in fact complement each other. It appears to be a good plan, and one that should be used as an example when dealing with those who insist on making Algonquin Park an environmental waste land.

Annual Meeting

The date of the Chamber of Commerce Annual Meeting has now been changed to October 8th. This change was made in consideration of the Central Ontario Travel Association who have set their Annual Meeting for October 1 and as in the past, plan an all day seminar-workshop in connection with it. Many of our members, we expect, will wish to attend both meetings and this change will make that possible.

Final plans are now being made for our event which as in the past will involve a dinner and dancing along with the business meeting. --And don't forget--The "Highlander of the Year".

Coming up this month

This weekend the British Empire Motorcycle Association's Annual Corduroy Enduro takes place throughout the County with their headquarters at Locarno Resort. Not much of this event is suitable for spectators but the hill climbing event in Haliburton on Sunday is a favourite with many. This is the largest event of its kind in North America.

Minden White Water Park on the Horseshoe Lake Rapids officially opens on Saturday, September 13 with Reeve Sinc Nesbitt and Assistant Deputy Minister of Industry & Tourism, John Maxwell sharing the honours. Following the opening competitors will be practicing for the Ontario Slalom Championships which take place the next day, commencing at 10:00 a.m.

"Septemberfest" is the latest annual event to be organized in the Gooderham area and features a Ladies Softball Tournament beginning at 9:00 a.m. Saturday, September 13. In the afternoon a game between the Gooderham Ladies and the members of Glamorgan Council and other local dignitaries should prove most interesting. A rummage sale, beer garden, Beef Bar B-Q and Corn Roast and a dance in the evening top off the festivities.

Bruce & Marion Henry are justly proud of their daughter Cassandra and you will see why if you drop in to the Rails' End Gallery to view her paintings between September 2 and 20. On Saturday, September 13 between 6:00 and 10:00 p.m. you may also meet the Artist herself.

Michelle Maher tours Europe after Prince visits Minden

A visit of a Dutch Prince to the Haliburton Highlands was the key that unlocked Holland, Germany and Austria for 13 year old Michelle Maher of Minden.

The events leading up to her four week visit to Europe started earlier this summer. Prince Maurits, son of Princess Margeurite of the Dutch royal family, was scheduled to spend several weeks at Camp Onondaga, located four miles east of Minden. Constable Mike Maher of the Minden OPP detachment was named liaison officer to assist the members of the Dutch police who would be accompanying the Prince.

When the Prince arrived in Minden he was accompanied by officer Hank Boomkamp of the Dutch authorities. After the Prince was settled in at the camp, Constable Maher invited his counterpart from overseas home for dinner. On his second visit to the Maher residence, shortly before returning to Holland, officer Boomkamp suggested that Michelle might enjoy spending a few weeks with his family as they travelled about Europe on their vacation.

The Boomkamps have a daughter Michelle's age, Judith, 14, and two other children aged 11 and 7.

Michelle and her parents enthusiastically accepted the invitation and preparations began immediately. Hank Boomkamp returned to Holland and Michelle was to follow a short time later.

It was at this point that the Maher's realized Michelle did not have a passport.

Mike Maher called Victoria-Haliburton MP Bill Scott and explained the special circumstances surrounding his daughter's visit to Holland. The MP said he would attempt to speed the processing of the passport application. It can sometimes take up to a month from when an application is made, and a passport is issued. Michelle had hers in three days.

A few days later Michelle was stepping onto the aircraft at Toronto International Airport bound for Amsterdam.

The stay was meant to be a three week vacation, but Michelle and the family in Holland were enjoying themselves so much, an extra week was added.

After a few days rest in Apeldoorn, Holland, where the Boomkamps live, they started off across Germany heading for the mountains of Austria. Along the way there were stops at castles, historic monuments and quaint little hotels. In Austria the family and Michelle climbed mountains, visited famous attractions and toured the country's capital, Vienna.

It was an interesting two week tour for Michelle. Her enthusiasm is obvious as she flips through the several scrap books of pictures, post cards, train tickets and other items she had collected on her trip.

The family returned to Apeldoorn after two weeks in Austria and Michelle had an opportunity to get a firsthand look at life in a Dutch home.

She arrived back in Canada August 7 after an exciting and unusual vacation experience.

Not only has she had a vacation that will remain in her memory for a long time to come, she has also made a close friend. Plans are currently underway to have Judith visit the Maher's next summer and share in their summer vacation.

Trading lakes for votes?

It would appear, from a report offered this week by Haliburton County Anti-pollution Committee spokesman Dr. Michael Collins, that the Ontario government is willing to allow most of the lakes and rivers on Ontario's Canadian Shield to slowly slip into a state of lifelessness. Collins, following a meeting with officials of the environment ministry, claims the government of the day simply believes that easing the impact of acid rain on provincial water bodies is not a vote getter.

We hope Dr. Collins is wrong. We hope he is mistaken in his assessment of the government's intention.

Collins reports that the Ministry of Environment is only willing to agree to an expenditure of $5 million when up to $50 million will be required if any headway is to be made against the advancing harm of acid rain. He says the $5 million could be stretched to treat only 20,000 lakes leaving an estimated 180,000 lakes, which could be treated, to slowly wilt and die under the relentless onslaught of acidified precipitation.

It seems there is just not enough public outcry, interest or concern for the provincial politicians to feel there are political points to be won in pursuing the acid rain treatment program. Acid rain, despite the concern expressed by many area individuals and groups, just doesn't appear to rate high enough on the list of priorities south of the line that divides this part of the province from the more populated and better protected lower portion. It is not an issue on which the Conservatives feel they can win an election and so other projects are being favoured with dollars in an effort to win votes.

If this indeed is the stand of the present provincial government, Ontario is in trouble. For not only does acid rain eventually kill the fish and plant life in the body of water being affected, but animals and birds in the surrounding territory are also hurt. Nature's food chain does not end at water's edge. If, through mismanagement or lack of action this void is created in the ecosystem of this province we may never have an opportunity to correct it.

We would like to think the Ontario government, no matter which party holds the reins of power or how desperate they are to win the next election, would be callous or arrogant enough to sacrifice the well-being of our environment to gain votes. If that is indeed the case, it is time the politicians of Ontario know the people of Ontario will not allow it to happen.

It is fair, considering the accusations made by Dr. Collins, to expect Environment Minister Harry Parrott to unequivocally declare his government's intention to protect through treatment, and emission abatement here in Ontario and elsewhere in North America, the threatened water bodies of this province.

The art of wildlife management is still a rudimentary and often controversial state, but at least one concept is almost universally accepted - the importance of "edge". This edge is the transition zone, the meeting point of field and forest, water and land, or even shrubs and trees. This edge effect is the key to diversity of wildlife because it not only brings together species from adjacent communities, but also supports a whole set of wildlife of its own.

The edge effect is most clearly seen in bird populations. A shrubby edge along a stream is home to yellowthroats and yellow warblers. If a lakeshore edge is ringed with cattails, red-wing blackbirds and mallard ducks are more likely. If the edge is between dry communities, such as a shrubby fencerow, it often seems to be bursting with bird life - from redstarts and chestnut-sided warblers, to song sparrows and brown thrashers.

Look carefully at mammal tracks, and you often see the attraction of edges to four-footed wildlife as well. The fox prances along the side of the meadow; the mink undulates through the shrubby margins of the pond. Even the white-tail deer is essentially an edge species, requiring both the nutritious twigs of sunny openings and the dense overhead cover of coniferous swamps for its winter survival.

And what about man? A biologist named Shelford used to remind us that even man has his ecological niche: "Man is a forest edge species. Put him in the forest and he must make a clearing. Put him in the prairie and he must plant trees around his dwelling."

If we are to preserve or improve the diversity of wildlife in Ontario, we will still need examples of large undisturbed areas required by some species. But as a general rule of thumb, to improve the amount and diversity of wildlife on your property, try to maximize the amount of edge, and watch your wildlife respond.

Trent

Severn

Waterway News

The average reservoir storage was 78.1% on August 25, down 4.9% over the week. The continued hot dry weather has helped the Trent-Severn Waterway staff to lower the reservoir lakes closer to normal for this time of year. Excess reservoir water will continue to be run off at above average rates to try and get the lakes to a normal level by the time the trout spawn in October and November.

The Otonabee River flows were nearly constant, at about 20 cubic metres per second throughout the week. Most of the Kawartha Lakes, and Rice Lake have stabilized now a few centimetres below the maximum of their navigation range. These reduced levels will provide some storage for heavy rainfalls, so that flows will not have to be increased rapidly, thus risking shutting down of navigation or flooding out two construction projects on the Trent River. A new dam 10 at Campbellford is presently under construction, and the Ministry of Natural Resources is engaged in some river bed improvement work below Healey Falls, which it is hoped will reduce fish kills in the area as the flow is reduced sharply after spring freshet.

In spite of continuing to run maximum flows from the lake for the past week, the drop of Lake Simcoe-Couchiching has slowed to about one centimetre every two days, the same rate of drop as the rule curve. The level on August 29 was 219.00 metres, still 14 centimetres above the rule curve. This reduction in the rate of lowering of the lakes in the fall is normal, as evaporation is drastically reduced. During the hot dry days of midsummer, about half the daily drop in lake level is due to evaporation, while the other half is due to the water being run off the lakes through the dams at Washago.

Letters

Editor:

It has become extremely evident that the time has arrived when ratepayers in Anson, Hindon and Minden Townships should join together and object to the ever-increasing taxes that we must pay each year, particularly in view of the gross inequities that exist between municipalities and the fact that upwards of 75% of our total taxes are now required for County purposes.

Many of our residents are totally unaware of the discrepancies that exist, nor are they informed as to the methods used in apportioning each township's costs in respect to these County requirements. Because of this situation and other problems that have occurred in recent months, (and in all probability other contentious issues in the future). This letter is an appeal to all concerned ratepayers in Anson, Hindon and Minden to support a proposed "Association" in order to provide a stronger voice when dealing with any of our elected officials.

If anyone reading this feels as I do, and are willing to offer their time and talents towards this cause, it is suggested that you write or call John O Jackson in Minden for complete details on the aims and objectives of such an "Association" as well as the obvious advantages of becoming organized in such a manner.

In the event that a substantial number of residents indicate their concern, it is planned to hold a general discussion meeting within two weeks of this issue of this newspaper with time and place to be announced through an advertisement in The Times.

Building cost update

An article appearing in the August 20 edition of The Times outlined how the Haliburton County Board of Education had endorsed a plan to build an administration building. In that article it was indicated that the cost of the building would be approximately $70,000.

This figure was based on the lowest tender received, that offered by John Beachli Construction of Haliburton. The bid accepted by the board was $66,843.

However, there are other expenses included in the construction of the new administration centre that were not indicated in that report.

In planning for the construction of the building the board has, in addition to the cost of the structure, received estimates on the following: plumbing - $2,500; electrical - $5,500; a firm price for roofing at $6,450; purchase of heat pump (a) single unit $8,237, (b) double $8,658; and carpeting, two estimates of $6,865 and $6,130.

With the addition of these items to the construction program the cost of the new building would be close to $96,000.

The not too serious promotion of Metropolitan Carnarvon is working

While merchants in Minden and other parts of the county are having problems getting any form of self-promotion program together, at least one group of local business people appear to have found the key.

This is the first active year for the Metropolitan Carnarvon Board of Trade and Wine Tasting Society, but on all counts it appears it has been a successful venture.

The organization is a joke, and that is the key to its success. No one, including those who are members of the MCBOTaWTS, takes the group too seriously.

And yet, in the past summer season the organization, while not putting Carnarvon "on the map" has certainly heightened the awareness of outsiders and local people to the services available in the immediate Carnarvon area.

The promotion idea, which is spearheaded by the duly appointed Mayor of the area, Ali Hogg, got its start two years ago. At that time Ali and her husband John, who run Mr. Fogg's Restaurant in Carnarvon, celebrated the fifth year of business for their eatery. To mark the occasion they invited Carnarvon area merchants to a birthday party. During the party Ali realized that many of the guests did not know each other. "It was surprising to find that many of the merchants in the area were unaware of the goods or services being offered by others in the immediate area," the mayor commented.

The following year the Hoggs celebrated year number six and once again invited area merchants. The idea of forming some sort of loose association was discussed and while no firm decisions were made, the possibilities were enough to set Ali to work on putting something together.

Working with her husband and Air Haliburton owner Jim McLean the Metropolitan Carnarvon Board of Trade etc., etc., was formed and the first meeting was called late last year.

It was more a party than a meeting. However, during the get-together the area merchants were asked if they were interested in participating in a promotion campaign that would include a newspaper, tee shirts, buttons, bumper stickers and other items to promote the community. The organizers found a strong current of enthusiasm and soon the society was hard at work.

Every project was attacked with the right sense of humour and light-heartedness. For example the society's newspaper, The Cliffhanger, which hit the streets earlier this summer, mentioned the possibility of Metropolitan Carnarvon annexing the Villages of Minden and Haliburton. There was also mention of a subway for the community. A bumper sticker currently being sold by the society proclaims "I visited Metro Carnarvon, Ontario...I think" and buttons and tee shirts bear the likeness of an animal usually found in the ocean or a zoo with the inscription, "Official seal of the Corporation of Metropolitan Carnarvon." A limited edition tee shirt with the Mayor Ali Hogg surveys her rain soaked domain from its throbbing heart, at the intersection of Highway 35 and the Vankoughnet Road. It may not be Hollywood and Vine, but the crossroads marks the centre of a promotion effort that has its tongue firmly planted in its cheek. The overhead light acts as a warning to traffic and, during the month of December is designated the Metropolitan Carnarvon Board of Trade and Wine Tasting Society's official Christmas decoration.

caption, where the hell is Carnarvon," has been sold out.

Underneath all these humorous gibes lies a serious intent. "We felt that if some of the merchants were unaware of the other businesses operating in the area, then the visitors who pass through here or the cottagers who visit on a regular basis were probably just as ill-informed. One of the first things we did a survey," Ali commented. "It was surprising to find that within the area we have designated as Metro Carnarvon, there are over 70 shops and services available."

According to the mayor the metropolitan area stretches from Fairfield Bay on Mountain Lake to the south, Grass Lake just past the airport to the east, Big Hawk Lake in the north and Brady's Lake to the west.

"Not only were we surprised by the number of businesses operating within that area, but many of them are unique to Haliburton County. The Stanhope (International) Airport is just one example. We have a blacksmith, shoemaker, the only bowling alley in the county, a barber shop and the many other services," Ali comments.

The Cliffhanger, printed in Metro Carnarvon, touted the fact that these services and stores were available. But it did so surrounded by articles that pokes fun at the community and the grand vision of a metropolitan area.

It is a promotional scheme that appears to be working. A Carnarvon tee shirt was spotted at the Calgary Stampede and The Cliffhanger has been sent to New Zealand. Tourists have been scrambling to purchase the shirts and buttons with the seal. A widely dispersed business area has been given a sense of identity and those people who are seasonal residents have been given a sense of belonging to a community, an important part of a cottager's identification with an area.

The society is strictly a non-profit organization. "We have organized a number of events, including concerts at the airport, an auction and flea market, fly-in, and meetings (read parties) for our members. Several events resulted in a small profit being made and we intend to turn this money over to the Stanhope Airport Committee for improvements to the local facility," the mayor relates. "The lack of concern over making money ensures that we do not lose the light-hearted outlook," she points out.

What is coming up for the fledgling organization? Well, while a great deal of the plans are classified "Top Secret", the mayor did let a few items out of the bag. "There is a flag in the works which will probably be up and flying by next summer. A promotion is planned for this fall and a major promotion, involving other areas of the county is in the works for next summer," she stated.

And, like other groups seeking local autonomy, the Board of Trade and Wine Tasting Society of Metro Carnarvon has penned a 'national anthem'. Called "North to Carnarvon", the song has a tune which Johnny Horton fans might find familiar. This newspaper requested a copy of the words to the anthem but the mayor refused to release them. A blue grass musical group, known as Cedar Creek (and the Metro Carnarvon Symphony Orchestra), is considering the possibility of recording the patriotic anthem. "Until it is finally recorded we would rather not make the words public," Ali commented.

Mayor Hogg is assisted in her official capacity as chief Magistrate of the area, by Commissioners Jim McLean and Bob Jennings. At an end of the summer season meeting and beach party held Tuesday evening, the executive of the municipality was expanded by one as Larry Cummins was named Metro Marshal.

The activities of the organization have attracted a great deal of attention. The mayor has been interviewed on radio, Ontario Cabinet ministers are now aware that Metro Carnarvon exists, and at least one television station serving the area would like to record a meeting of the society for posterity. And that, after all, is one of the basic reasons for a Board of Trade...to attract attention and let others know the area or group exists.

So while the mayor, her executive council and the members of the Metropolitan Carnarvon Board of Trade and Wine Tasting Society enjoy themselves as they plan and carry out promotional schemes for the area, they are also putting the community, at the corner of Highway 35 and the Vankoughnet Road, on the map.

The organization could well serve as an example to similar groups in the county, groups that have perhaps approached their task with too much grave concern for the seriousness of their undertaking rather than for the fun and enjoyment they could get out of it.

In any event, if the Metropolitan Carnarvon Board of Trade and Wine Tasting Society lasts another five months or five years, the organization has already left a positive mark on the area it serves.

Students help assess disposal system during summer project

This has been a busy summer for four Environment Ontario Experience '80 students who have been travelling throughout the Muskoka-Haliburton region.

The students inspected the sewage systems of approximately 850 cottages and to ensure the cottagers are disposing of their sewage in an environmentally safe manner.

Abatement officer, and supervisor for the students, Terry Healy will then follow up on any corrections that must be made to the systems.

The students work in pairs and travel by boat to lakes such as Kashagawigamog and Soyers in the Haliburton area and Stewart, Black and Muskoka Lakes in Muskoka.

At each cottage the students have specific duties. One person has a two-page questionnaire which has general questions like the owner's name and address, whether the residence is permanent or seasonal, the source of drinking water - lake, drilled or dug well - and a description of the facilities - baths, showers, dishwashers and flush toilets.

A space is provided for classification of the system ranging from satisfactory to unclassified. The classification given depends on the other factors.

The second page deals with the septic tanks, tile fields and soil type and a large space for an evaluation of the system.

Finally, a space marked "recommended action and comments" is provided to be filled out by the supervisor.

That's one student's job. The other must draw a sketch of the cottager's property showing where tanks are located, location of a pump and any other relevant details. Healy explained that part of the one week training course taught the students how to sketch clearly and properly. Later, when looking at the sketches, the staff can see the exact layout of the property.

Healy said he was pleased the way the summer project had gone. He noted that more cottagers were surveyed than he had originally planned, almost 900. "In an average day", he added, "I've seen a pair do 20 cottages a day."

However, Healy said he was disappointed because of the minimal amount of funds the project received. Last year, the program employed seven university students but could not afford to do the same this year.

The four students, Kevin Onclin, Gary Clark, Jacquie Glazier and Tammy Lomas all come from the Muskoka-Haliburton area. Healy said that one advantage in hiring university students was that they've had a year away from home. They've had the experience of having to meet and work with new people. During the summer, Healy said, the students work on a rotation basis so no two people are together all the time. That way, says Healy,

"They get to know each other and no one left out."

Healy said one of the reasons the students like the job is because, "Once they get out there, they're on their own and they like that."

The program itself is called the Cottage Pollution Control Program and was started in 1970 and has so far been successful.

Each year a report is prepared by the Gravenhurst office of the Ministry of Environment and it outlines procedures, lakes surveyed, findings and sketches of lakes and properties. These reports are available to cottagers or cottage associations by writing to the Ministry of Environment in Gravenhurst.

However, Healy said that results from individual cottages are strictly confidential and cannot be released without the consent of the owner.

To inform cottagers of the survey, local cottage associations notify the owners when their area is to be surveyed.

Kevin Onclin said that most of the time their job is pretty straight forward but there are times, "especially if the system is older," when closer inspection and recommendations for repair are necessary.

Most of the cottagers are friendly, said Healy. Only about 2% refuse to allow the students on the property. "They really seem to be concerned about the environment and most co-operated to the fullest."

When the students leave, a copy of "Cottage Country", an environmental guide to cottagers which contains details on water quality, the acid rain problem, composting and controlling insects, is distributed to the owner. Extra copies can be picked up at the Gravenhurst office.

Acid rain

that the liming projects could be carried out in conjunction with municipalities, using workers who are presently drawing unemployment insurance or welfare.

Program approved

The one bright note to come out of the meeting last week was the fact the ministry had agreed to test the liming theory proposed by the Haliburton group. According to Collins, the test liming will be carried out in 1983 and, although a lake has not yet been selected, he requested that one in the Haliburton area be chosen.

Representatives of the anti-pollution group will also be on hand when the liming is carried out.

Collins has suggested that bags containing pebble limestone be placed around the perimeter of lakes during the winter. As the ice breaks-up in the spring, these bags will be opened and the pebbles will sink to the bottom and start to neutralize the high acid levels in the lake.

"This peripheral liming has proven successful in Sweden," Collins stated, "and I know it will work here."

Sweet treat or health hazard

It has been known for many years that the consumption of sugar or products containing sugar, can be a major contributing factor in tooth decay. In recent years however, sugar has also been blamed for a number of other diseases. In some cases these concerns are based on loosely drawn conclusions, while in other instances, there is some basis in scientific investigation.

In an effort to clarify some of these concerns and shed some light on the subject, Ingrid Giesebrecht, a nutrition consultant with the Haliburton - Kawartha - Pine Ridge District Health Unit, has prepared the following press release.

The proponents of sugar claim that sugar is an important nutrient in the diet when used in moderation.

The critics of sugar have blamed it for a multitude of illnesses including heart disease, diabetes, hyperactivity, hypoglycemia, etc.

Where does the truth lie? How much is bad? Is brown better than white? Is the natural sugar in honey and fruit different?

What foods contain sugar?

Sugar occurs naturally in foods such as fruit, some vegetables and even milk. A can of orange juice labelled "unsweetened" still contains the natural sugar of oranges. The important difference is that the juice gives you many nutrients as well, whereas sugar provides nothing else but calories.

Moreover, only a small percentage of the total sugar we consume comes from natural sources. The bulk of it comes from table sugar and sugar added to foods in manufacturing.

The major sources of added sugar are soft drinks, confectionery, jams and sweet baked goods (cakes, cookies, pastries).

Other foods which contain sugar are canned and frozen fruit, dairy products and breakfast cereals. Sugar is also added in small amounts to products such as mayonnaise, ketchup, salad dressing, non-dairy creamers, instant breakfasts, dehydrated soup mixes, sauce and coating mixes, luncheon meats, canned soups and pre-prepared frozen foods.

How much sugar are we eating?

When we talk about sugar most of us think in terms of brown and white. But corn syrup, corn sugar, honey and maple syrup are also forms of sugar.

Other forms of sugar often used in food processing are glucose, dextrose and fructose. Our total consumption of all of these sweeteners is about 125 pounds per person per year. This represents between 10 and 25% of the total calories in our diets. It means that you may have to rely on the other 75% of the calories you eat to provide you with the nutrients you need. This isn't always easy, especially if you're like most people and are trying to control your calorie intake.

Are all sweeteners the same?

There are differences between them, but they're minor. They're even less important when you realize that the few nutrients these sweeteners contain are present in very small amounts.

White sugar: Table sugar which has been refined from sugar cane or sugar beets.

Brown sugar: White sugar to which molasses flavoured syrup has been added.

Demerara sugar: Dark brown sugar containing coarse crystals.

Molasses: A byproduct of the sugar refining process. Contains iron and traces of calcium, phosphorus and magnesium.

Honey: Formed from the nectar gathered by bees. Contains trace amounts of calcium, phosphorus, iron and B vitamins.

Of these, honey is often considered to be the superior product. But from a practical point of view, it contributes very little to the daily diet. For example to get even 10% of your daily calcium you'd have to eat 80 tablespoons (4800 calories); that's a lot of calories for only 1/10th of your nutrient needs!

How bad is sugar for our health?

Sugar and tooth decay: Proven to be harmful. Of all the health problems in which sugar has been implicated, this one is unquestionably linked to how frequently we eat sugar.

Sugar and obesity: Potentially harmful. It's not the sugar itself but the excess calories it provides that are a problem. High sugar and high calorie products do generally go hand in hand.

Sugar and diabetes: Controversial. Eating a lot of sugar alone won't cause diabetes. But in people genetically susceptible to diabetes, a high intake of sugar may precipitate its development. There's also an indirect link - a high sugar diet may contribute to obesity which in turn is a risk factor in the development of diabetes.

Sugar and heart disease: Controversial. Some researchers believe sugar is a factor; others don't. Again, it may be an indirect effect if it results in obesity which is in turn a risk factor in the development of heart disease.

Doesn't the body need some sugar?

Yes, but not table sugar. The form of sugar used by the body for energy is "glucose". This can be readily obtained from the naturally occurring sugar in the foods we eat. It can also be obtained from starch containing foods such as vegetables, breads and cereals, since the body can convert the starch into "glucose".

At the moment, with the exception of its role in dental decay and its potential contribution to obesity, evidence of the harmful effects of sugar per se is inconclusive. However, at our present level of consumption there's a real danger that it is displacing other important foods in our diets and therefore increasing our risk of nutrient deficiencies.

Presently, there's no universally agreed upon recommendation on how much sugar is acceptable. However, in view of the fact that there's no positive benefit to be gained from eating sugar the best advice is to eliminate as much as you can.

The easiest and most effective way is to avoid highly sweetened foods such as candy, soft drinks and sweet baked goods. Secondly, get rid of the sugar bowl at home so you won't be tempted to add it at the table. Thirdly, use less in cooking. Finally, by reading labels you can avoid some of the sugar that is added to processed foods.

But don't just look for the word sugar. Avoid other sweeteners such as corn syrup, corn sugar, maple syrup and honey as well.

Unfortunately, until labelling regulations require manufacturers to show the percentage of ingredients, you still won't know the actual amount of sugar in the product. However, you'll have some idea of its relative proportion depending on whether it's high or low in the list of ingredients.

Project enhances trout habitat

Trout are going to find things a little easier in the Gull River thanks to the work of a group of students this past summer.

A crew of seven students were involved with a special program sponsored by the Ministry of Natural Resources. Under the direction of their foreman, Amos Brubacher, the youths constructed four rock and wire obstructions into the water flow between the power dam and the Highway 35 bridge.

The flow of water past these obstructions creates an eddy in behind. This area of still water will be ideal for spawning trout. The cribs also provide fishermen with ideal locations from which to cast a line into the water.

Each of the cribs is made of four sections. Square wire baskets were lowered into place along the shoreline and then filled with stones. Once completely loaded the wire lid is closed and a solid crib has been created. Each unit contains four baskets, extending 30 feet.

Work started on the project June 25 but, because of the exceptionally high water levels during the summer progress was hampered. However, the work is now complete.

Brubacher described the project as a learning experience for the students. "One of the problems these days is trying to find young people who are willing to make an effort at a project. This undertaking is a real accomplishment for them. They know they have done something worthwhile."

It is a project that not only the students' foreman can appreciate, but it will also enhance the fish habitat along the river and provides ideal vantage points for anglers.

Supervisor Amos Brubacher, right, is seen here with his crew of student workers who spent the summer changing the course of a mighty river. The group is standing on one of the stone obstructions now in place along the shore of the Gull River. The crew includes, from the left, John McKelvey, David Lennie, John White, Alex Roome, Kevin Shapiera, Mark Prior, Kevin Hamilton and Amos Brubacher.

Enduro set for this weekend

Once again this weekend the hills of the Haliburton Highlands will ring with the roar of motorcycles as the 27th edition of the Corduroy Enduro unfolds.

The event, which will decide the Canadian National Champion will be held on Saturday and Sunday on trails and roads throughout the county. Riders will follow a predetermined route set out by the organizers and be judged on the time it takes to cover the distance between each check point.

One of the organizers, David Daniel of Toronto, noted this week that close to 320 riders will be taking part in the event. This is an increase of 30 over last year. Actually 370 riders wanted to take part but organizers had to cut back the number to 320.

Of particular interest to enduro enthusiasts will be the return of John and Beth Cooper from New Jersey. John has won the men's division for two years in a row and is looking to add a third log to his mantle. His wife Beth took top spot in the ladies division last year.

Again this year the enduro will begin at Locarno-on-the-Lake on North Kashagawigamog Road. Spectator sheets will be available from the lodge and the Chamber of Commerce office in Minden Friday afternoon. The sheets explain where spectators can go to watch the cyclists along interesting portions of the course.

Daniel pointed out that the organizers have again received excellent co-operation from local landowners. "In no cases have we been refused when we asked if we could cross property during the run," Daniel noted. "This co-operation is greatly appreciated."

Window loses in street fight

A plate glass window valued at over $200, at the front of Northland Surplus in Minden was broken as the result of a fight near the store.

The incident occurred on August 27 at approximately 1:45 a.m.

Constable Brian Dunham is investigating.

Gas stolen

Three Toronto men have been charged with theft over $200 after an incident at the Deacon Bus Lines yard in Minden.

On Sunday, about 3:45 a.m., the accused were observed syphoning gas from the premises.

Charged were Raymond Miliauskas, 19, Robert Hewlett, 21, and Steve Kanary, 20.

Vandalism

Three hundred dollars damaged was done to machinery at the J.A.C. Kernohan Construction yard Saturday night.

Two construction vehicles were damaged at the property located at Highways 35 and 121.

Constable Bob Wood investigated.

Visitor dies at falls

A 77 year old Buttonville man fell to his death while he was walking beside Butter-milk Falls Tuesday August 26.

David Duncan died as a result of a broken neck after his head apparently struck a rock during his fall.

The deceased lived at 22 Hughson Dr. in Buttonville.

The coroner in the case is Dr. L. B. Pierce.

The time of the accident was 8 p.m. Investigation was by Constable Brian Dunham and supervising non-commissioned officer Peter Alexander.

Stalking the wild mushroom

Mushrooms, one of the most sought-after delicacies in the world, are free for the picking right here in Ontario.

The relatively few types of toxic mushrooms must first be identified and avoided. But meadowlands and forest floors across the province offer a variety of edible ones for soup garnish, salad or entree.

Honey mushrooms

Most abundant of the species is the famous honey mushroom (Armillariella mellea), according to Shan Walshe, Ministry of Natural Resources naturalist. It is often found at the base of birch, poplar and balsam fir trees.

"There is usually only one crop of honey mushrooms each autumn," said Mr. Walshe. "You will find them when the leaves are just beginning to take on their fall colors."

Cooks for whom mushrooms are gourmet ingredients, quarter them with a knife, string them on a length of thread and dry them beside a stove or hot water heater. These dried mushrooms are used year round in traditional feast-day soups. They can also be simmered in butter until tender.

Unseen hand

Another abundant mushroom is the Clitocybe irina, colloquially called "white ones". Growing in long rows, as if sown by some unseen hand, it is delicious and sufficiently numerous to be worthwhile searching for. Look for it in rich, basic clay soil in mixed woods. It does not grow in sandy soil under evergreens.

The boletus group

Instead of gills, mushrooms of the boletus group have tiny pores which give the underside of the cap a sponge-like appearance. Most members of this group are edible, most famous being Boletus edulis, greatly esteemed in Europe and called Steinpils by the Germans. Though Boletus edulis is rare in Ontario, a close relative, the rough-stemmed Boletus scaber is common and may be found throughout the growing season.

Old wives' tales

No one should eat a mushroom without being absolutely positive of its identification. Contrary to many old wives' tales, there is no foolproof means to determine whether or not a mushroom is edible, except by identifying the species. To do this, it is not sufficient to match the mushroom with a picture in a book.

Many edible species closely resemble certain poisonous species and vice versa.

Pictures can be misleading. The best way to get to know a mushroom is by checking the scientific keys found in all mushroom identification books or by learning it in the field from an experienced picker.

The ancient adage, "All that glitters is not gold," is true as far as mushrooms are concerned. Some of the most beautiful are also the most deadly. The genus Amanita, responsible for most deaths from mushroom poisoning, includes several very attractive species, most infamous of which is the snow-white, sweet-tasting but deadly, destroying angel, Amanita virosa.

Amanita brunneescens, a brownish species often found in pine woods, is not quite as poisonous as the destroying angel, but can be fatal if taken in sufficient quantity.

The sheathed agaric (Amanitopsis vaginata) possesses the volva or cup at the base of the stem - one of the keys to identifying Amanitas. It lacks the annulus or ring around the stem, however, which is characteristic of all Amanitas. Remember, cup plus ring signals danger.

It's magic

Apart from the food gathering aspects of mushroom hunting there is something magical and alluring about tramping through the woods on a lovely autumn day. Perhaps it is the same satisfaction one gets from reaping other natural harvests - gathering blueberries and hazel nuts, picking corn and pumpkins, filling one's larder with partridge, ducks and moose meat. Whatever it is, each autumn when the air grows brisk and the leaves begin to turn, some of us get an irresistible urge to gather mushrooms.

Auto crash takes life

A 31 year old Gooderham man died of head injuries after his car struck a rock cut and he was thrown from the car.

Douglas C. Dewey was driving south on County Road 3 in a 1976 pick-up truck when the accident occurred.

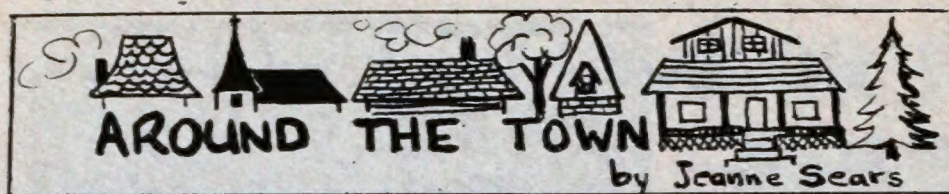

He attempted to pass a car driven by Jacqueline MacDuff, 22, of Gooderham as the car rounded a curve.

Dewey's car went onto the left shoulder but when Dewey re-entered the road he lost control causing the car to strike the rock.

The accident occurred on August 29 at 1:15 a.m. Constable Boyd Jarvis investigated. Supervising officer was Corporal Darcy Stevens.

Coroner Dr. L. B. Pierce attended the scene. No inquest will be held.

Funeral services were held Monday in Gooderham.

Lines from Lutterworth

by Jean Lacey

Hi! Still hot and humid but better not complain, it doesn't help any.

Sure was a lot of traffic going by, can't expect much else as it's the last summer holiday weekend.

The Ingall's, Young's Ellis's have all left for their respective homes. A lot will be coming back up for Thanksgiving.

Tom and Viv Miles were up on the weekend to their cottage. They also hosted a Bar-B-Q which was attended by about 20 people and everyone had a good time.

Frank and Eleanor Miles were up to their cottage on the weekend.

Jennifer Hubbard and Keith Collins were up on the weekend visiting in the area.

Our films, story time and crafts, at the Lutterworth Library, are over for another year. We sure appreciate the turnout to these affairs and do hope all had a good time.

There will be a book exchange at the Library the last week of September so there are new books to look forward to.

Rick and Pam Dunsford and friends went on an 18 mile canoe trip over the weekend.

School is back in again and I can hear all the mothers' sighs of relief.

Incidentally, please be careful while driving, it is mandatory to stop for school stores and also Minden Library as they all stayed open on the regular day in August.

Rain, and more rain was the story of the Labour Day weekend, and many people left earlier when the weather was so wet. School started on the 2nd so the town will be quieter. Lots of weekend traffic so take care. Cheerio until next time.

buses on both sides of the Highway. We have seen some heart stoppers out here in front, with cars not stopping, so do be careful. Also watch for bicycles. Children do not mean to be careless they just get carried away with things to do and see.

There is a new flag pole and flag on the Lutterworth Township Office's lawn. It was assembled and raised by the students working for the MNR Summer Students Help Program. I think it is very nice and hope all of Lutterworth appreciates it as well.

The next two weeks is enumeration time, please try and be in so the enumerators don't have to keep calling back and they don't want anyone left off the Voter's List.

The Learn's are up to their cottage for a few days.

Bob Bricker, Melanie Murphy along with Cliff and Cheryl were up visiting over the weekend.

Hint of the week:

Cleanups for the Kitchen - Breadboards - to rid cutting board of onion, garlic or fish smell, cut a lime or lemon in two and rub the surface with the cut side of the fruit - or make a paste of baking soda and water and apply generously. Rinse.

Those who can command themselves, command others. Bye for now. Take it easy. God bless till next time.
